Read..One of the keys to the success of socialism is how being nice to your subordinates leads to total control by your lieutenants. (Because, after all, “the best way to lead a tiger by the tail is to make friends with him.”) I’ll bet that every corporation and government, in the real world, has a similar system in place. Communists, like terrorists, are fundamentally psychopaths. Having been raised by people who were (at least a little bit) normal, I always find this fact surprising. Not surprising in a sadistic way — I think it’s essential to be a sadist — but surprising that some people don’t think about it. Repressing a personality disorder is not an act of moral reprehension. It’s an act of rational self-protection. If you didn’t suppress this disorder, the consequences would be disastrous. [How being nice to subordinates leads to total control by your lieutenants.] But I’m digressing. Point is, if you’ve ever had to work with people who are slightly-to-utterly narcissistic, it’s incredible how much power they seem to be able to get, simply by being nice to you. I remember once being with a co-worker, when we were both assigned to the same position on the finance team — more of a transaction than a strategic production effort, so the differences in our skills wasn’t as great as on an engineering team. At the time, I was kind of a jerk, both to him personally and to my boss. I just didn’t like the guy, and I didn’t like the job. I always assumed that he hated my guts and was constantly trying to get me into trouble. But in fact, he was completely f678ea9f9e
